

Cayman Islands Data Protection Law

With the enactment of the Cayman Islands Data Protection law, 2017, Scotiabank is recirculating our privacy agreement which details how the personal information collected by the Bank is used and with whom the information is shared. An objective of the agreement is to ensure customers understand the ways his/her personal information in our custody may be used. Key features of the agreement includes giving customers the ability to refuse or withdraw their consent to certain types of data collection or marketing solicitation.

Details of these features are provided on our website and applicable policies have been updated in our terms and conditions of service.

The Bank feels it is important to be transparent with our customers in regards to how we use their personal information and to ensure that we have obtained consent in regard to uses of personal information including any non-essential uses.
